74-foot-long frieze of paintings/murals, "Transported". Article: Mela Lyman.

"In this diminutive 12-sides folly of a building, Boston painter Mela Lyman has created a...homage to the aquatic.. above the windowed walls. Lyman loves the water. She also loves blue, and her terminal murals are saturated with particularly rich shade that has a soothing effect on the harried passengers passing through to catch a plane. The spirtually of the color is complemented by the other-worldly swimmers in Lyman's world, their suspended state a metaphor for the traveler's."

Constructed of brownstone, its walls are broken by large and small arched windows resting on sills which coincide with three narrow string courses placed slightly above the main floor levels inside. The large window arches of the first floor are similar in shape and texture to those of the third but are open underneath and filled with glass. Between them is a recessed portal under a series of receding arches which spring from low engaged columns on either side. The string course above overlaps the engaged columns at the corners of the building and in its continuity adds an effective horizontal accent to the design.

The windows of the second story are smaller than those of the first and third and are arcaded in sets of three and two which contrast effectively with the wall openings above and below. Above the windows of the second floor and level with the window sills of the third is another belt course with cable molding providing a link between the decorative treatment of the walls and the formal organization of the design. The prominent triple arch windows of the third floor are of Italian origin and contrast in shape with the horizontal sweep of the cornice. At the same time, the linking of arches on all three floors is Romanesque, while the smooth ashlar walls of the first floor and the pronounced cornice on the roof have their roots in the Renaissance palace style of 15th century Italy. The basement is of rusticated and rock-faced masonry and is similar in treatment to the upper walls which are also rock-faced but laid in random ashlar. The main entrance is under a series of receding arches approached by a low flight of stairs that converges toward the top.

Unlike the Romanesque of Richardson,

One of the few granite stone mercantile/warehouse buildings to survive the Boston fire of 1873, this 1853 landmark structure was renovated by architect Dennis C. Rieske as the new headquarters for the Boston Society of Architects (above). Purchased at a foreclosure sale, the structure required extensive rehabilitation for which the Boston Landmarks Commission set the standard. The BLC regulated the reconstruction of the mansard roof and gutter system, window replacement, shop front elevations, masonry cleaning techniques, and the paint scheme.

Description; not illustrated

Associations. "Brook Farm"
West Roxbury

The association was incorporated in 1841 as "The Brook Farm Institute of Education & Agriculture" but was later incorporated as the Brook Farm Phalanx (Phalanx). It consisted of an old mansion house, a school called "The Nest" and another building called "The Phalanstery". When the latter bldg was destroyed b fire in the autumn of 1847 the movement was abandoned. The farm was sold to Roxbury for a poor-farm & ultimately became the "Martin Luther Orphan Home."

It is of light granite; its semi-cylindrical form w/ conical roof, fringed by pointed dormer windows, gives it an unusual appearance. 4 Boston Chamber of Commerce The steep conical roof with crowning coronet is the distinctive feature of the former Boston Chamber of Commerce, popularly known as the Flour and Grain Exchange. Built in 1890-92 and recently rehabilitated for offices, it was designed by Shepley, Rutan and Coolidge in the Romanesque Revival style established by their predecessor, H. H. Richardson, architect of Trinity Church in Copley Square. The large, three-story arches of the granite facade emphasize the former trading floor used by the Exchange. The building and its immediate neighbors illustrate the range of 19th century architecture to be found in the Custom House District.

Decorations for Wellesley College Completed by Boston Artists

Claxton Moulton of this city designed and painted the ceiling and wall decorations for the new Students' Alumnae Building at Wellesley College, which was dedicated on December 5.

These are in the form of decorative panels on cloth which take the place of tapestries and have somewhat the same appearance. They cover acoustical felt pads without interfering with the properties of the latter.

The artist painted similar panels for the Boston Harvard Club in 1915.

Dudley Square, Roxbury

Q. What can you tell me about the Intercolonial Hall in Dudley Square, Roxbury? For years it was a dance hall for O'Leary's Irish Minstrels and other groups, the scene of political rallies, and other functions. Who was the architect, and when was it demolished?

T.M., Arlington

A. Intercolonial Hall is still standing, although in a very deteriorated condition. It was built in 1906 by architect Harris M. Stephenson (1845-1909), a Jamaica Plain resident who also designed St. John's Episcopal Church and other houses in Jamaica Plain. The three-story luxurious Intercolonial Hall opened in April 1907. It offered to its members several meeting rooms, a library, smoking rooms, a banquet hall, a gymnasium, a bowling alley, billiard rooms, and, most popular of all, dance halls that attracted thousands of Irish immigrants homesick for a taste of Ireland. According to John Latchford, writer for Dorchester Community News, live Irish music would ring out from the packed dance halls.

Purchased building at 52-56 St. Botolph St early in the 1900s. This building, designed by Cabot and Chandler in 1886 for the Allen Gymnasium Company, was converted in 1913 by architects Maher and Winchester into hall, studios, and assembly rooms. A ballroom or convention hall, large enough to accomodate 1,100 people was added during the remodeling. Later, a restaurant, billard alcoves and barber shop were added. The purpose of the conversion was to provide a meeting place for musical societies as well as offices for business affairs. As of 1981, building served as union headquarters for Musicians' Union Local # 9-535. REF: BLC/St. Botolph Area, p. 15.

"The great exposition bldg, the largest & most practical structure for large gatherings on the American continent is completed....The bldg, in point of size, is 1/3 larger in floor area than Madison Sq. Garden, NYC. The interior is beyond doubt the finest acoustically of any large public structure in the world. This gives to Boston the finest music auditorium in existence...On the roof of the bldg. is arranged the longest aerial promenade in America; 6 min. must be consumed to traverse the continuous walk around the top. At each corner of the bldg along the wald the visitors may stop to partake refreshments in the ladie tea and ice cream room toers, situated on the front nearest the Harvard Bridge, a cool drink in the man's cafe tower nr. the New West Boston Bridge, a light lunch in either one of the 2 rear towers, or rest on the portico front & enjoy the cool breezes blowing from the Charles River Basin while being entertained by a select ladies' orchestra of 14 pieces....The bldg will be the mos brilliantly lighted edifice in this country. 44 flaming ar c lights will blaze from the exterior & thousands of Tungsten lights w/ special reflectors to electrify in dazzling splendor the interior will combine to make the most brilliant evening scene ever created..."
